communist conspirators have elected to make their play for global conquest, and that we have joined the issue thus raised on the battlefield; that here we fight Europe's war with arms while the diplomats still fight it with words."

"Never in our history had we fought a war which we did not carry to victory. There is no other excuse for war. (As America's greatest modern general put it)—"There is no substitute for victory." "Our need for patriotic fervor and religious devotion was never more impelling. There can be no... halfway in the preservation of freedom and religion. It must be all or nothing. We must unite in the high purpose that the liberties etched upon the design of our life by our forefathers be unimpaired and that we maintain the moral courage and spiritual leadership to preserve inviolate that mighty bulwark of all freedom, our Christian faith."

COL. CHARLES A. LINDBERGH
United States Army

In 1941, before we entered the war, Col. Lindbergh was invited to address a Congressional Committee in Washington. His address was of such wisdom and character that many honest thinkers believed that he was the best qualified man to be President at that time. He said that the real danger to America lay in Asia, Russia and China.

He asked why we should destroy Germany when Germany should join us in destroying the Soviet Union. Destroy Germany by helping England, and then Russia would just walk in and take over. He also said that, in letting Germany, England and the communists fight it out alone, Germany would probably win.

The words of Gen. Albert C. Wedemeyer, onetime commander of U.S. forces in China, delivered in commemoration of Lindbergh's flight in 1927, are important to generations of Americans unborn. Lindbergh revealed to Americans the military and commercial wealth of the skies. He was the great American whose love of country lived on despite the savage attack by President Roosevelt, not only against his person but also on his honor as an American.

THE STORY OF LINDBERGH'S GREAT WAR JOB

It's about time the story of the great contributions made by Lindbergh to our country's victory in the air in World War II should be revealed. Despite the petty vindictiveness of Franklin Roosevelt, the contributions were made possible by military leaders who found a way to bypass the White House venom expressed in the Roosevelt-Hopkins chortle, "We're going to win this war with our friends."

Maj. Gen. Charles A. Willoughby

As General Wedemeyer said: "many men would quit" after such churlish treatment by a President of the United States. Then he added:

"But Lindbergh didn't retire to write bitter memoirs or seek seclusion. He worked for his country and for mankind."

"Only a few people know what Lindbergh accomplished during the years when he was officially blacked out. And this knowledge is largely confined to the armed forces and the aviation industry."

"I think the public is entitled at least to some of the unpublicized contributions in the Lindbergh Odyssey."

"When the Japanese hit Pearl Harbor, Col. Lindbergh found it impossible, because of the political climate (FDR's personal antagonism), to participate in the war as a member of the armed forces, so he went to war as a technical representative of the aircraft industry. He went on many missions with Corsairs. He took part in strafing raids; he flew cover bombers and did special bombing, to prove what the Corsair could do."

GEN. GEORGE S. PATTON, JR.
United States Army

These statements were made on May 8th, 1945, at the press camp of the United States Third Army in Regensburg, Germany, at a press conference called by General Patton, for the American, French and British correspondents.

"This war stopped right where it started."

"But that's not the end of this business by any means. What the tin-soldier politicians in Washington and Paris have managed to do is another story you'll be writing for a long while if you live."

"They have allowed us to kick hell out of one bunch and at the same time forced us to help establish a second one as evil or more evil than the first."

"We have won a series of battles, not a war for peace. We've headed down another long road to losing another peace."

"You cannot lie down with a diseased jackal. Neither can we ever do business with the communists."

"The Russians really took us for suckers after we saved their lives."

"This day we have missed another date with our destiny, and this time we'll need Almighty God's constant help if we're to live in the same world with Stalin and his murdering cutthroats."

"I wonder how the dead will speak today when they know that for the first time in centuries we have opened Central and Western Europe to the forces of Genghis Khan; I wonder how they feel now that they know there will be no peace in our times and that Americans, some not yet born, will have to fight the Russians tomorrow, or 10, 15 or 20 years from tomorrow."

LT. GEN. GEORGE E. STRATEMEYER
United States Army (Ret.)

"May 2, 1957, should bring sadness to every Freedom-Loving American, for on that date America lost Senator Joseph R. McCarthy, one of our greatest fighting sons. Senator McCarthy brought evil (communism) to the attention of the citizens of the United States of America more than any other one American. He was killed by the anti-Christ movement in the world—particularly here in these United States of America. But he was not destroyed. His great Patriotism and Americanism will live on forever."

"You get in war to win it. You do not get in war to stand still and lose it. And we were required to lose it. We were not permitted to win."

GEN. JAMES A. VAN FLEET
United States Army (Ret.)

General James Van Fleet, back from leading the Eighth Army in Korea and under questioning by Congressional Committees, made these points:

"A chronic shortage of ammunition has existed until recently in Korea; it sometimes was critical. Nevertheless, U. N. troops were on the way to knocking out the communists when the war was halted in 1951 after truce talks were under way. In the sit-down war that has followed, communists are telling the people of Asia that they have won victory."

"My own conviction is that there must have been information to the enemy, from high diplomatic authorities, that we would not attack his home bases across the Yalu."

MAJ. GEN. GEO. VAN HORN MOSELEY
United States Army (Deceased)

"Historians of the future will marvel most of all at the non-resistance of those who had the most to lose."

"When a nation embarks on a path of military spending as a means of supporting its economic life, then powerful external enemies become an economic necessity. War scares are an integral part of the technique of promotion. With these weapons statesmen can extract from citizens consent for military outlays when it would be impossible to do so for peace time enterprises. And the most powerful and vocal enemies of public spending—the conservatives—can be drugged with fears of aggression."
